But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take you stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

An article by Mark Lewis titled "Our Constitution Was Made Only for a Moral and Religious People – Part Three" was posted at townhall.com on April 20, 2024. Following are excerpts of the article.

John Adams wrote: "Our Constitution was made only for a moral and religious people. It is wholly inadequate to the government of any other."

So, John Adams and our Founding Fathers believed government power must be limited because of the tendency, all through history, of governments to become increasingly tyrannical and take freedoms from the people.

Our Founders wrote a Constitution specifically stating what the national government could, and could not, do (with checks and balances, frequent elections, separations of powers) – thus expressly defining the freedoms of the people and the power government had over them.

Most of the power in the American political system was placed in the hands of the states (Bill of Rights, 10th Amendment). The wisdom here is evident in that state (and local) governments are closer to the people and thus more easily controllable.

I don't know Joe Biden, have never met him, and have absolutely no influence over him whatsoever. But the mayor of my town might be my next-door neighbor. And if I don't like what he is doing, I can go and kick his backside. I have some influence there which I do not have on the national level.

It is a brilliant system in protecting the rights of the people – limited power in the national government, nearly all of it in the more-controllable state and local governments.

But, because of man's evil nature (some more than others), humans do need to be restrained. If Unrestrained, the vilest among us will murder, rob, rape, etc. So, limitations must be placed on the behavior of humans. Government does have a role to play in that.

“If all men were angels, we wouldn't need government,” James Madison said.

But, alas, all men are not angels, and thus some restrictive force is necessary to prevent the most evil among us from infringing upon the lives and welfare of others. Most laws against murder, rape, etc. are local or state laws. But the national government is to play a part here – especially against foreign aggressors.

The federal government (not the states) is in our Constitution given the right to “declare war” to protect us from foreign murderers, robbers, rapists, etc. Government's purpose is to “secure” the rights of its citizens by protecting them from foreign and domestic evil. Government must have some power.

But, again, because of the tendency in the past of every government know to man to increase its power at the expense of the liberties of the people, our Founders wrote that Constitution telling government and the people exactly what their federal government could and could not do. Very limited powers. Read the Constitution and see.

But back to restraining men. Since government is limited in its power over its citizens, then (as Adams so correctly enunciated) religion becomes the major restraining force. Because the Constitution gives the federal government very, very limited power over its citizens, it was written “only for a moral and religious people” (who will restrain themselves). This is true self-government.

Thus, the most freedom possible for the American people is produced. Protection from government tyranny by the Constitution.

Voluntary freedom to live virtuous, ennobling, upstanding lives as directed by their “enlightened religion” (Jefferson) which was almost universally believed by early Americans.

It was the most magnificent system of government and societal ethos ever established by human beings. It is, frankly, remarkable.

Sadly, it has in many ways, failed because of the very thing the Founders tried to protect against – the wickedness of man and the tendency of politicians to lust for power and control over others.

Nations are built (not on the ideals but) on the nature of man. Americans have proven to be no better than anyone else in history. A noble experiment in self-government that didn't work as hoped.

- First – In the Founders' system, our rights come from God and the purpose of government is to protect those rights – not grant them.

Leftists do not believe in God, so they believe all our rights come from government. Government give rights, government takes them away. The Left hates religion because religions teach that humans must have a higher allegiance to God than to government. In the Left's totalitarian system, citizens can have no greater loyalty than to government (run by Leftists, of course). The Founders' system is utterly abhorrent to them.

- Second – the Left hates the Constitution because it limits government's power over the people.

Leftists are totalitarians, that is, government is to have complete power. There is no God above, so obviously, the highest power comes from man. Greek philosopher Protagoras said: "Man is the measure of all things."

A limited government is exactly opposite what Leftists want today. To them – freedom is chaos. Self-control is just that – self-control, not government control.

An government of all aspects of society (including what you think) is what Leftism demands.

- They don't care who goes to bed with whom.
- They don't care how many children are mutilated and destroyed.
- They only care that they allow it and you don't oppose them.

The worst possible crime one can commit is to say: "God condemns that behavior." That sends a Leftist into paroxysms of mouth-foaming spasms. It is the worst sin imaginable.

The Leftist, not God, determines what is right and wrong. And you had better believe it, or off to the gulag you go – if you survive the firing squad.

- Limited government.
- A moral, religious people.
- Freedom!

- This was the system established by our Founding Fathers.
- It hasn't been a total failure, but what exists today is certainly not what they intended.
- The Left is deliberately trying to distort our history & system our Founders established.
- For one reason – they want power over you.

An article by Uri Berliner titled “I’ve Been at NPR for 25 Years, Here’s How We Lost America’s Trust” was posted at thefp.com (The Free Press) on April 9, 2024. Following are excerpts of the article.

You know the stereotype of the NPR listener: an EV-driving, Wordle-playing, tote bag-carrying coastal elite. It doesn't precisely describe me – but it's not far off. I'm Sarah Lawrence-educated, was raised by a lesbian peace activist mother, I drive a Subaru, and Spotify says my listening habits are most similar to people in Berkeley.

I fit the NPR mold. I'll cop to that.

So when I got a job here 25 years ago, I never looked back. As a senior editor on the business desk where news is always breaking, we've covered upheavals in the workplace, supermarket prices, social media, and A.I.

It's true NPR has always had a liberal bent, but during most of my tenure here, an open-minded, curious culture prevailed. We were nerdy, but not knee-jerk, activist, or scolding.

In recent years, however, that has changed. Today, those who listen to NPR or read its coverage online find something different: the distilled worldview of a very small segment of the U.S. population.

If you are conservative, you will read this and say, duh, it's always been this way.

But it hasn't.

For decades, since its founding in 1970, a wide swath of America tuned in to NPR for reliable journalism and gorgeous audio pieces with birds singing in the Amazon. Millions came to us for conversations that exposed us to voices around the country and the world radically different from our own – engaging precisely because they were unguarded and unpredictable. No image generated more pride within NPR than the farmer listening to Morning Edition from his or her tractor at sunrise.

Back in 2011, although NPR's audience tilted a bit to the left, it still bore a resemblance to America at large. Listeners described themselves in the following manner – 26 percent as conservative, 23 percent as middle of the road, and 37 percent as liberal.

By 2023, the picture was completely different – only 11 percent described themselves as very or somewhat conservative, 21 percent as middle of the road, and 67 percent of listeners said they were very or somewhat liberal. We weren't just losing conservatives; we were also losing moderates and traditional liberals.

An open-minded spirit no longer exists within NPR, and now, predictably, we don't have an audience that reflects America.

That wouldn't be a problem for an openly polemical news outlet serving a niche audience. But for NPR (which purports to consider all things), it's devastating both for its journalism and its business model.

Like many unfortunate things, the rise of advocacy took off with Donald Trump. As in many newsrooms, his election in 2016 was greeted at NPR with a mixture of disbelief, anger, and despair.

(Just to note, I eagerly voted against Trump twice, but felt we were obliged to cover him fairly.)

But began as tough, straightforward coverage of a belligerent, truth-impaired president veered toward efforts to damage or topple Trump's presidency.

Persistent rumors that the Trump campaign colluded with Russia over the election became the catnip that drove reporting. At NPR, we hitched our wagon to Trump's most visible antagonist, Representative Adam Schiff.

Schiff, who was the top Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, became NPR's guiding hand, its ever-present muse. By my count, NPR hosts interviewed Schiff 25 times about Trump and Russia. During many of those conversations, Schiff alluded to purported evidence of collusion. The Schiff talking points became the drumbeat of NPR news reports.

But when the Mueller report found no credible evidence of collusion, NPR's coverage was notably sparse. Russiagate quietly faded from our programming.

It is one thing to swing and miss on a major story. Unfortunately, it happens.

- You follow the wrong leads.
- You get misled by sources you trusted.
- You're emotionally invested in a narrative.
- Bits of circumstantial evidence never add up.

It's bad to blow a big story.

What's worse is to pretend it never happened, to move on with no mea cupas, no self-reflection. Especially when you expect high standards of transparency from public figures and institutions, but don't practice those standards yourself. That's what shatters trust and engenders cynicism about the media.

Russiagate was not NPR's only miscue.

- [Mr. Berliner then discussed the organization's mistaken approach toward two other stories – the Hunter Biden laptop and the origin of Covid.]

I'm offering three examples of widely followed stories where I believe we faltered. Our coverage is out there in the public domain. But to truly understand how independent journalism suffered at NPR, you need to step inside the organization.

- [Mr. Berliner proceeded to talk about how the organization handled the George Floyd event led to a shift of the reporters attempting to change systemic racism.]

We were told that NPR itself was part of the problem.

We were told that diversity (on our staff and in our audience) was the overriding mission.

Race and identity became paramount in nearly every aspect of the workplace. Journalist were required to ask everyone we interviewed their race, gender and ethnicity – and had to enter it in a centralized tracking system.

There was a growing number of employee resource (or affinity) groups based on identity.

- MGIPOC – Marginalized Genders and Intersex People of Color
- Mi Gente – Latinx employees at NPR
- NPR Noir – black employees at NPR
- Southwest Asians and North Africans at NPR
- Ummah – for Muslim-identifying employees
- Women, Gender-Expansive & Transgender People in Technology in Public Media
- Khevre – Jewish heritage and culture at NPR
- NPR Pride – LGBTQIA employees at NPR
- DEI

In essence, this means the NPR union (of which I am a dues-paying member) has ensured that advocacy groups are given a seat at the table in determining the terms and vocabulary of our news coverage.

What is notable is the extent to which people at every level of NPR have comfortably coalesced around the progressive worldview.

And this, I believe, is the most damaging development at NPR – the absence of viewpoint diversity.

Concerned by the lack of viewpoint diversity, I looked at voter registration for our newsroom. In D.C. (where NPR is headquartered and many of us live) I found 87 registered Democrats working in editorial positions and zero Republicans. None.

So on May 3, 2021, I presented the findings at an all-hands editorial staff meeting. The response wasn't hostile. It was worse. It was met with profound indifference.

[Later, Mr. Berliner pointed out how the emphasis upon diversity did not increase the audience among blacks and Hispanics.]

Despite all the resources we'd devoted to building up our news audience among blacks and Hispanics, the numbers have barely budged.

- In 2023 (according to our demographic research) 6 percent of our news audience was black – far short of the overall U.S. adult population, which is 14.4 percent black.
- And Hispanics were only 7 percent – compared to the overall Hispanic adult population around 19 percent.
- Our news audience doesn't come close to reflecting America.

With declining ratings, sorry levels of trust, and an audience that has become less diverse over time; the trajectory for NPR is not promising. Two paths seem clear.

- We can keep doing what we're doing, hoping it will all work out.
- Or we can start over with the basic building blocks of journalism – we could face up to where we've gone wrong.

[Eye on the World summary: Although the organization sought diligently to promote the diversity of people, they created an environment that strayed badly from journalism – and the diversity of thoughts and ideas.]

Isaiah 55:6-11–“Seek you the Lord while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the Lord, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. ‘For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,’ says the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word by that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”
