Luke 21:34-36—"But take heed to yourselves, lest your souls be weighed down with self-indulgence, and drunkenness, or the anxieties of this life, and that day come on you suddenly, like a falling trap; for it will come on all dwellers on the face of the whole earth. But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take your stand in the presence of the Son of Man" (Weymouth New Testament).

An article by Jake Dima titled "Mexican Officials Worried Biden Immigration Policy Is Incentivizing Human Smuggling and Gang Activity" was posted at washingtonexaminer.com on March 10, 2021. Following is the article.

Mexican officials in internal assessments have expressed worry that the Biden administration's immigration stance, characterized as lenient by many conservatives, is incentivizing gang activity and human smuggling.

The authorities said organized crime is recruiting personnel and expanding its reach in response to U.S. policy changes that encourage the flow of migrants through the southern border, according to Reuters, which obtained reviews and intelligence from the Mexican government. An official, who was not identified by name, further added that gangs have begun to diversify "from the day Biden took office," and they're now reaching "unprecedented" levels of sophistication.

"Migrants have become a commodity," the person said. "But if a packet of drugs is lost in the sea, it's gone. If migrants are lost, it's human beings we're talking about."

Mexican President Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador, on March 1, referred to Biden as the "migrant president."

"They see him as the migrant president, and so many feel they're going to reach the United States," he said. "We need to work together to regulate the flow because this business can't be tackled from one day to the next."

The internal assessments further revealed that policies from within Mexico are encouraging migration to the U.S. due to covid-19 vaccinations and protections for children. Those looking to cross the border have been implored to bring children with them, following a new law in the country that bars families with children who are seven and older from being returned to Mexico if border enforcement is unable to house them.

Migrants also use social media to communicate while traversing the border and instruct individuals to tell authorities they have been victims of extortion or street violence to heighten their chances of asylum status, the documents said.

The Biden administration has been grappling with a border crisis as officials anticipate that 117,000 children will arrive at the U.S.-Mexico border without a parent or guardian in 2021, according to a White House Domestic Policy Council document. The massive number dwarfs previous highs in 2014 and 2019, when 68,000 and 80,000 solo children made their way into the U.S., respectively.

U.S. border officials noted at least 20,000 illegal crossings each week in February as the administration faces backlash over its handling of the crisis.

Biden, in mid-February, mandated ICE officers seek approval from senior leadership before deporting anyone that has not crossed the border recently. The president's policy also requires the agency to focus only on "threats to national security" and other highly dangerous offenders.

"By focusing our limited resources on cases that present threats to national security, border security, and public safety, our agency will more ably and effectively execute its law enforcement mission," ICE acting Director Tae Johnson said of the rules, which will be in effect for the next two months. "We must prioritize our efforts to achieve the greatest security and safety impact."

On Tuesday, Florida sued the administration after alleging "serious criminals" were not being detained by ICE authorities in the Sunshine State. Similar litigation was filed in Arizona and Montana.

"Given your recent plea for volunteers from throughout the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) to support Customs and Border Protection's work at the border, I request that you publicly declare that the situation at the southern border is a crisis," Arizona Rep. Andy Biggs, a Republican, said in a letter to Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas.

An article by Seth J. Frantzman titled "Latest Houthi Attack Shows Reach of Iran Power" was posted at jpost.com on March 8, 2021. Following is the article.

The Iranian-backed Houthi rebel attacks on Saudi Arabia are rocking the Middle East. They recently carried through on threats to launch a major attack on Saudi Arabia.

In early March, the Houthis threatened to target energy infrastructure in Saudi Arabia. In late February, they also targeted Riyadh. Saudi Arabia says it has intercepted 526 drones and 346 ballistic missiles over the last several years.

The kingdom said the drone attack on Ras Tanura Port on Sunday and attempted missile strike on an Aramco residential area "had targeted global energy supplies. Ras Tanura is one of the world's largest oil shipping ports, and the Aramco complex in Dhahran houses workers and their families from all over the world," Arab News, an English-language daily newspaper published in Saudi Arabia, reported.

Gulf Cooperation Council Secretary-General Nayef Al-Hajraf said: "These terrorist attacks do not only target the security and economic capabilities of the kingdom, but also the nerve center of the global economy and oil supplies, as well as global energy security."

Saudi Arabia's media has highlighted that US politicians are concerned a lack of response from the White House may be emboldening the Iranian-backed Houthis.

The new US administration took the Houthis off a list of foreign terrorist organizations that the Trump administration had added them to in January. Since then, they have rapidly expanded their attacks and launched an offensive on Marib in Yemen. Saudi Arabia intervened in Yemen in 2015.

The attacks on Saudi Arabia are a regional threat by Iran. This is clear in their complexity. The Houthis did not have drone and ballistic-missile technology before Iran sought to support them. Like Hamas and Hezbollah, they have grown with Iranian support and technical know-how.

Evidence shows that some attacks on Saudi Arabia that were alleged to be by the Houthis actually came from Iraq. That includes attacks in January 2021 and in May 2019. The Iranians directly attacked Saudi Arabia's Abqaiq facility in September 2019.

This shows that Iran has launched a regional war against Saudi Arabia. It comes at a bad time for Riyadh because the US is harshly critical of Riyadh for involvement in the killing of Saudi dissident Jamal Khashoggi in 2018.

The Houthis have also threatened Israel in the past. This included the basing of potential long-range drones and also because the official Houthi slogan includes curses of Jews and seeking the destruction of Israel.

"The continued escalations of the Houthi militia in Marib province coincided with the escalation of its extremist attacks on civilians in Saudi Arabia," Yemeni Information Minister Muammar Al-Eryani was quoted by Arab News as saying on Sunday. The Iranian-backed militia is used as a tool to destabilize the security and stability of Yemen and the countries of the region, he added, state news agency SPA reported.

The UAE has condemned the attack on Ras Tanura Port as well. The UAE Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation confirmed, in a statement, that this cowardly attack targets energy supplies and security, which reflects the Houthi group's challenge to the international community and its disregard for all international laws and norms, Al-Ain reported.

"It urged the international community to take an immediate and decisive stance to stop these repeated actions that target vital and civilian installations and the security and stability of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia," the report said.

Meanwhile, the Houthis have said an "indirect" meeting with the US in Oman was not fruitful, according to Iran's semi-official Fars News Agency. According to pro-Houthi media, the Houthi forces are advancing "like lightning" on various fronts in Marib, and Riyadh-affiliated forces are retreating and losing ground despite air support and the recruitment.

Speaking about the Houthis' military prowess, a member of the group's political bureau said: "We are now able to build a variety of weapons and military equipment, from weapons to drones."

Iran's Tasnim News Agency showed how closely Iran follows, and likely coordinates, these attacks. Several stories included claims from the Houthis of their attack as well as pointing out how Saudi Arabia had been dealt a blow. The Houthis call the attack Deterrence Operation 6.

The overall message of the attacks is that the Houthis can escalate this conflict as Iran did in September 2019. Iran senses that Saudi Arabia is isolated. It knows the US is trying to forge a peace agreement in Afghanistan, potentially working with Iran, India, Pakistan and Turkey to do so. It also knows that it is pressuring the US in Iraq and potentially doing so in Syria.

In the Gulf, it continues to seek to mine ships, as it did with the attack on an Israeli ship earlier this month. It also knows the US did not respond to a 122-mm. rocket attack on Al-Asad Base earlier this month. Why stop now, Iran wonders.

Riyadh is hesitant to escalate anywhere else and wants the war confined to Yemen. The expanded attacks on Saudi Arabia show that even though Riyadh has improved its air defenses, the Houthis can continue to seemingly target areas of the country at will.

An article by Michael W. Chapman titled “U.S. Catholic Bishops Oppose $1.9T ‘Relief Bill’ Because It Uses Tax Dollars to Pay for Abortion” was posted at cnsnews.com on March 9, 2021. Following is the article.

Because the $1.9 trillion covid relief bill, the American Rescue Plan Act, does not include prohibitions against taxpayer-funding of abortions in the United States and abroad, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) has urged lawmakers to vote against its passage.

Currently, the bill is in its final round in the House of Representatives and could land on President Biden’s desk this week. The legislation passed in the Senate (50-49) on March 6 with an amendment, now under review in the House.

“Despite our pleas and those of millions of Americans, the final bill you are about to vote on does not contain pro-life protections,” said six Catholic bishops in a letter to all the U.S. senators on March 6. The six bishops hold committee chairmanships in the USCCB, overseeing issues such as justice and peace, education, racism, migration, and pro-life activities.

The president of the USCCB, Archbishop Jose Gomez, also issued a statement on March 5, urging Congress to insert the traditional pro-life protections into the bill—the Hyde Amendment and the Helms Amendment.

“As a result, should this bill pass, our tax dollars will be used to destroy unborn human lives through elective abortion,” said the bishops in their letter. “The many important and life-affirming provisions in this bill are now greatly undermined because it facilitates the destruction of unborn human life.”

“This grievous result gives us heavy hearts because it leaves us with no choice but to urge you to oppose final passage of the American Rescue Plan Act,” said the bishops.

The bishops clarified that they fully support providing aid and assistance to “poor and vulnerable people who are most at risk of harm from this pandemic.” They support covid relief. However, as they explained, the legislation—unlike all previous and similar relief bills—does not adhere to Hyde and Helms Amendment rules.

The Hyde Amendment, which has been supported by Congress every year since 1976, prohibits federal funds from being used to pay for abortion, except in the cases of rape or incest, or when the life of the mother is endangered.

The Helms Amendment, established in 1973, says “no foreign assistance funds may be used to pay for the performance of abortion as a method of family planning or to motivate or coerce any person to practice abortions.”

The $1.9 trillion American Rescue Plan Act “would appropriate more than $400 billion with no Hyde protections,” according to the Family Research Council (FRC). “Therefore, these funds would be eligible to subsidize elective abortions.”

Also, the bill would provide “over $700 million of global health funds not subject to the Helms amendment,” said the FRC, and it allocates “$10 billion in foreign affairs funding not subject to the Silander amendment. This means these funds can be used to lobby for abortion overseas.”

Senator Kevin Cramer (R-N.D.) told the FRC, “Remember, there’s not been a single hearing on any of this. [This is a] $2 trillion dollar bill, [and there’s no] hearing, no discussion across party lines—at least no overt discussions across party lines. And when you don’t have hearings, you don’t have committee action . . . which means [everything is] away from the C-SPAN cameras and the media that covers these things. That’s why people don’t know.”

In their March 6 letter, a copy of which was obtained by CNS News, the U.S. bishops further said, “[U]nlike the previous covid relief bills, the American Rescue Plan Act provides billions of dollars for health care services through various funding streams that are not subject to Hyde Amendment or Helms Amendment protections and could therefore fund abortions domestically and internationally.”

“We have consistently and strongly rejected the inclusion of abortion as part of health care because abortion directly and purposefully takes the life of an innocent person and is the antithesis of health care,” said the bishops. “No federal proposal to aid states, support individuals needing affordable health care coverage, or provide relief overseas should compel Americans to pay for the destruction of human life through their tax dollars.”

Maureen Ferguson, senior fellow for the Catholic Association, said of the legislation, “It is tragic and ironic that pro-abortion Democrats are insisting on subsidizing the taking of innocent lives in a bill aimed at saving lives. The Hyde amendment, which protects American taxpayers from funding abortion, has had bi-partisan support and consensus for more than 40 years.”

“Any bill which excludes Hyde cannot claim to advance unity,” she said. “Democrats have hidden this abortion funding under the guise of ‘pandemic relief’ because a majority of Americans don’t want to pay for abortions—in fact, recent polling shows 58% oppose domestic funding for abortion.”

Tom McClusky, president of March for Life Action, said, “The current covid-19 relief package has the potential to be the largest expansion of abortion funding since Obamacare. Less than 10% of the 'relief' actually goes towards combatting the pandemic. Instead, pro-abortion politicians are using this bill to open the floodgates to abortion funding, with billions of dollars unprotected from being used for the life-ending practice both here in the U.S. and abroad."

"This is radically out of step with the majority of Americans who oppose their tax dollars funding it," said McClusky. "Americans who have been suffering from the effects of the pandemic deserve authentic relief, not this pro-abortion bonanza."

An article by Leah Barkoukis titled "The 'Massive Scandal' Buried in Covid 'Relief' Bill" was posted at townhall.com on March 9, 2021. Following is the article.

Republicans warned that only a small percentage of the American Rescue Plan was actually going toward covid-19 relief, and that the rest is filled with pork, far-left policies, and bailouts—hence why it passed on a party-line vote.

One provision in the $1.9 trillion legislation that's now coming under scrutiny is the $86 billion bailout for failing pensions. As The New York Times reports, taxpayer money is going towards problems that existed prior to the pandemic.

Tucked inside the $1.9 trillion stimulus bill that cleared the Senate on Saturday is an $86 billion aid package that has nothing to do with the pandemic.

Rather, the $86 billion is a taxpayer bailout for about 185 union pension plans that are so close to collapse that without the rescue, more than a million retired truck drivers, retail clerks, builders and others could be forced to forgo retirement income.

The bailout targets multiemployer pension plans, which bring groups of companies together with a union to provide guaranteed benefits. All told, about 1,400 of the plans cover about 10.7 million active and retired workers, often in fields like construction or entertainment where the workers move from job to job. As the work force ages, an alarming number of the plans are running out of money. The trend predated the pandemic and is a result of fading unions, serial bankruptcies and the misplaced hope that investment income would foot most of the bill so that employers and workers wouldn't have to. (NYT)

What's even more appalling? "The provision does not require the plans to pay back the bailout, freeze accruals or to end the practices that led to their current distress, which means their troubles could recur. Nor does it explain what will happen when the taxpayer money runs out 30 years from now."

That led some to argue that not only is the covid "relief" bill "the biggest single act of corruption in U.S. history," but that this bailout provision alone is a "massive scandal."

Unfortunately, the backlash is too little too late, as President Biden is expected to sign the legislation this week.

An article by Thomas Catenacci titled "House Passes Partisan Pro-Union Bill Decried by Business Groups" was posted at dailycaller.com on March 9, 2021. Following is the article.

The House passed the Protecting the Right to Organize Act, a sweeping bill backed by unions and opposed by business groups, largely along party lines late on Tuesday.

The House passed the Protecting the Right to Organize (PRO) Act, a bill that would substantially amend existing U.S. labor law, in a 225-206 vote Tuesday evening. Just five Republicans voted alongside Democrats in favor of the legislation while one Democrat voted with Republicans against it.

Republicans criticized the bill as a wishlist for union leaders and slammed Democrats for bypassing a House Education and Labor Committee markup of the bill. A vote to recommit the bill to committee failed prior to the final vote.

"The only thing the PRO Act does is protect the $1.6 billion that unions donate to support left wing organizations," Republican North Carolina Rep. Virginia Foxx said during a press call Monday. "And it supports the union bosses that profit off of hardworking union workers."

Foxx, who is the ranking member of the House Education and Labor Committee, added that unions have pushed for the bill to stop declining union membership, which has taken place over the last 60 years. The PRO Act forces unionization of workers who don't want to join a union or pay union dues, according to Foxx.

Republicans proposed a series of amendments to the PRO Act, which were rejected by Democrats. One rejected amendment proposed by Foxx would have required unions with a president or vice president who has been convicted of a felony within the last three years to file more detailed financial disclosures with the Department of Labor.

The PRO Act is a compilation of various policy changes that labor unions support, which would make it easier for unions to organize private-sector employees and minimize employees' choice in unionization.

The bill would remove workers' ability to vote against unionization via secret ballot elections, threatens the ability for a workforce to kick a union out and forces non-union workers to pay union dues, according to the Coalition for a Democratic Workplace (CDW).

The National Federation of Independent Businesses (NFIB) said the bill would create an environment ripe for union coercion. The PRO Act ultimately gives the National Labor Relations Board, not workers, the final say in the decision to unionize a workforce, according to the NFIB.

The PRO Act would also nullify right-to-work laws that exist in 27 states, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Right-to-work legislation guarantees citizens the ability to choose whether they'd like to join or not join a labor union, according to the National Right to Work Legal Defense Foundation. This type of legislation is fiercely opposed by unions, which they say take rights away from working people.

The PRO Act would additionally implement the so-called "ABC" test, a legal test adopted in California that determines if a worker is a freelancer or not. The provision makes it harder for freelancers to continue working independently, forcing them to either work as full-time employees or risk going jobless, according to the International Franchise Association (IFA).

An article by Jordan Davidson titled "Congress Passes Massive Covid Bailout Bill Which Costs Taxpayers More Money Than They Will Receive" was posted at thefederalist.com on March 10, 2021. Following is the article.

Democrats in Congress passed President Joe Biden's $1.9 trillion covid-19 spending bill on Wednesday without any votes from Republicans, costing taxpayers thousands of dollars more than they could potentially receive in a stimulus check.

The legislation, which Biden is expected to sign into law on Friday, contains a myriad of provisions ranging from extending unemployment benefits through September, expanding the child tax credit, allocating billions of dollars for small business loans through the paycheck protection program, designating billions more for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, expansions on Obamacare insurance subsidies even for those who may not need the financial help, paying the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) billions to help facilitate vaccine distribution and administration, grants for restaurants, money for schools which may or may not reopen, tax hikes, and much more.

Less than 9 percent of the total spending bill goes directly to combatting covid-19 or vaccine distribution.

"If this bill was about direct payments to people and putting shots in the arms and vaccines, you would have strong bipartisan support across this Congress and across this country," Rep. Jason Smith, R-Mo., said on NPR Wednesday morning.

One of the most popular measures included in the bill is direct payments of $1,400 to Americans who fall below a yearly income of $75,000 for individuals and $150,000 for couples who file jointly. An extra $1,400 will be distributed for each dependent an individual claims on their tax returns. Most of these payments, however, will not outnumber the price of the legislative spending that will eventually have to be paid by taxpayers, which amounts to approximately more than $5,000 each.

While at least $1 trillion sits unspent from the round of stimulus packages shoved through the legislature in previous months, other provisions unrelated to the pandemic were also tucked into the more than 600-page bill. It includes millions of dollars for libraries, public broadcasting, pollution mitigation, and abortion programs not subject to the Hyde Amendment, which is supposed to prevent taxpayer-funded abortions.

Republicans, all of whom voted against the bill, argue that it merely racks up the national debt and seeks to serve the people in power.

“If you are a member of the swamp, you do pretty well under this bill,” said House Minority Leader Republican Kevin McCarthy of California.

Others suggest it was a deliberate political move initiated by Democrat leadership and fed by Biden’s rejection of a cheaper, Republican proposal last month.

“This should be a targeted relief bill, but instead, this is an attempt by Speaker Pelosi to further promote her socialist agenda,” said House Minority Whip Republican Steve Scalise of Louisiana.

An article by Rachel Alexander titled “The Left’s Transformation From Anti-Establishment Free Speech Advocate to Government Control and Lockdowns” was posted at townhall.com on March 8, 2021. Following is the article.

The days of the 1960s are long gone when the left was known as the defender of free speech and resisting government control. Since the leftists eventually got their way, transforming government into a vehicle promoting their version of values—which consists of few morals combined with requiring everyone to bend over backward in order to comply with this attitude, no matter the damage—they now seek to defend the status quo. Can you imagine the hippies of the ‘60s at outdoor rock concerts wearing masks and social distancing? Of course not. Now the left attacks the right for gathering in crowds without obeying the lockdowns. Hollywood stars proudly virtue signal by posting photos of themselves wearing masks on social media.

Why did the left desert its principles? It’s because the left’s nonconformist behavior in the 1960s was never really about freedom and free speech. The left’s “principles” were really about forcing people to agree with their ideas, which can be boiled down to making everyone else as uncomfortable as they are. If you understand that about the left, you can explain any of their behavior, no matter how erratic. For example, they don’t appreciate evidence of our Judeo-Christian heritage, so they don’t want to let you enjoy it. Now that they’re fully entrenched in power, they love it and it’s made them want more power, which is why they are expanding the size and control of big government.

Their ideas have never been compatible with free speech and minimal government. Prominent Democratic presidents Woodrow Wilson and Theodore Roosevelt both pushed through a massive expansion of government power in the early 20th century. The 1960s was an aberration, which emerged because a faction on the left was too impatient to usher new radical changes through the usual political processes.

So for a brief period of time, the left appeared to care about free speech and opposing big government. This may explain why so many intelligent neocons were leftists in the 1960s. But as we've seen in hindsight, it was mostly a facade. The hippies opposed the government because it didn't give them the radical agenda they wanted—not because it was too big and controlling. They engaged in controversial free speech so they could ultimately force unpopular viewpoints on others. Marching for abortion rights carrying coat hangers paved the way to make abortion legal everywhere.

Notice you rarely hear about the ACLU anymore? The left won most of their free speech battles during the years following the 1960s. These included legalizing pornography and virtual child pornography, and what used to be considered obscene by getting the courts to narrow the definition of obscene. So the free speech battles now are on the right, which the leftist ACLU doesn't want to defend. Once in a while, the ACLU will defend neo-Nazis or white supremacists, in order to show it's being "fair." Well, that's not being fair, those offensive groups aren't "conservative," they're radicals who often have ties to the left. The most prominent white supremacist today, Richard Spencer, voted for Biden. Nazism is actually socialism, which is on the left.

Today, the left is in overdrive stamping out free speech everywhere. Can't criticize transgenders, can't discuss that objections to election fraud could lead to civil disobedience, can't post satirical memes because they're fake news, etc. At first, the left tried to defend the censorship by saying it was merely private big tech censoring conservatives. While big tech is taking the lead here, the censorship is occurring at all levels of society.

The left films people carrying signs or speaking in public places that results in terrible treatment by the left, including death threats. The left shows up at the right's rallies and drowns out their speech with noise or hassles the police into making the rallies inoperable. A man posted a voting meme and was prosecuted by the DOJ—he wasn't merely banned from social media. The left showed up at talk show host Tucker Carlson's home and banged on his door threatening "We know where you sleep at night." Rep. Maxine Waters (R-Calif.) instructed people to harass Trump officials in public.

Conservative intellectual Dennis Prager explained concisely why the left fears free speech: "One articulate conservative can undo years of left-wing indoctrination in a one-hour talk or Q&A." Facts, logic and reason are on our side. With technology now advancing so fast, young people are quickly finding ways around censorship, forcing the left to get big tech involved and expanding the censorship to every segment of society.

A moderate friend told me he could deal with the left if they would just back off on the lockdowns. He thinks they've finally gone too far. But the left will not allow people to pick and choose their viewpoints, they are required to adopt the whole slate or risk the consequences. A good friend of mine who voted for Biden hides her activities from her more radical friends because she disagrees with the masks and extreme measures. Who wants to be associated with the party of perpetual masks and social distancing, which is what the Democratic Party has become lately? Even some European countries to the left of us have backed down there.

No one in the U.S. even attempts to claim anymore that the Democrats are the anti-establishment and free speech party. Generation Z has grown up without any remnant of the '60s left. They've never known anything other than Democrats as the party of Big Brother. Thanks to hindsight, they naturally see the '60s as the vanguard to the Democrats' big government today,

A video and an article by Charles Creitz titled "[Black Journalist] Jason Whitlock Tells 'Life, Liberty & Levin' Too Many Americans Take Their Freedoms for Granted" were posted at foxnews.com on March 7, 2021. Following is the article.

"Too many Americans have taken for granted the freedoms that previous generations won," journalist and commentator Jason Whitlock told Mark Levin in an interview airing Sunday on "Life, Liberty & Levin."

From the founding of this country through the civil rights movement, Whitlock explained, "America has been on a fight for increased freedom."

"I think as we move further and further away [from the civil rights era], people have taken those freedoms for granted," he added. "They don't appreciate them. We've stopped asking people to ante up. I mean, just think about JFK, the inauguration speech. Ask not what the country can do for you. Ask what you can do for the country . . . now we've moved to this whole thing of asking the country what it can do for us."

Earlier in the interview, Whitlock described Americans as "fat and happy and . . . looking for their piece of the power pie. Our politicians are."

Whitlock warned that the only explicit guarantees in America's founding documents are of "freedom and the [right to the] pursuit of happiness."

"Now we're starting to ask the government to take care of us," he added. "This has been going on for a long time, but now it's just full-blown."

Whitlock cited the example of an executive order signed by President Biden that calls on high schools to allow transgender athletes to participate in the sport of the gender they identify as.

"That's about a feeling. 'I feel like I'm a woman, therefore you have to enact laws that that satisfy my feelings.' I'm not trying to denigrate or blast transgender people and their feelings, but a country can't operate on feelings," he said. "A country can't set up laws based on feelings. They have to be based on facts, data. It has to serve the entire country. It can't be this emotional thing."

The New York Times' 1619 Project and the introduction of critical race theory in schools and workplaces is also "about serving feelings more than serving reality," Whitlock said.

"There were laws in America that needed to be changed to ensure freedom for Black Americans. We changed those laws," he said. "Martin Luther King Jr. and that generation fought for that liberation . . . Now we have a generation that thinks America is at a place where we can start serving people's feelings . . . We're creating laws to satisfy feelings, but a government can't do that. You can't sustain a society where we're just serving people's feelings, because people's feelings are irrational."

An article by Craig Bannister titled "Candace Owens: If You Believe This, 'You Might Be #BlueAnon' " was posted at cnsnews.com on March 8, 2021. Following is the article.

Conservative commentator and BLEXIT leader Candice Owens shared a list of three beliefs that might indicate that a person is part of a newly named liberal conspiracy cult dubbed "Blue Anon."

On Sunday, Owens tweeted her list of things that might identify one as a Blue Anon member.

She said: "If you believe the following three ideas, you might be #BlueAnon."

- DC is under military occupation because there are non-stop threats from Trump supporters.
- Joe Biden is the most popular American President of all time.
- Russia, Russia, Russia.

According to the Urban Dictionary, Blue Anon is defined as a "loosely organized network" of Democrats "who spread left-wing conspiracy theories," such as the following.

- "The Russia hoax"
- "Jussie Smollett hoax"
- "Ukraine hoax"
- "Covington Kids hoax"
- "Brett Kavanaugh hoax"

Blue Anon is a response to liberals who label all conservatives as members of the QAnon conspiracy group.

An article by Larry Elder titled "Some Final Thoughts on Reparations" was posted at creators.com on March 11, 2021. Following is the article.

How would reparations be funded?

Conservative writer Michael Medved estimates that only 5% of whites in America "bear any authentic sort of generational guilt for the exploitation of slave labor."

Why should anyone but Democrats pay?

Scholar Dinesh D'Souza notes that all but a "handful" of slave owners were Democrats. The Ku Klux Klan, at its height of power and popularity, was known by the NAACP as the "terror wing" of the Democratic Party. The KKK was founded by Democrats; I did not say by the Democratic Party, but by Democrats. As a percentage of their party, more House Republicans voted for the Civil Rights Act of 1964 than did House Democrats. As a percentage of their party, more Senate Republicans voted for the Civil Rights Act of 1964 than did Senate Democrats.

I recently reread Martin Luther King Jr.'s 1963 "Letter from a Birmingham Jail," in which he takes fellow clergymen to task for asking him to wait. King wrote:

"Perhaps it is easy for those who have never felt the stinging darts of segregation to say, 'Wait.' But when you have seen vicious mobs lynch your mothers and fathers at will and drown your sisters and brothers at whim; when you have seen hate filled policemen curse, kick and even kill your black brothers and sisters . . . When you are harried by day and haunted by night by the fact that you are a Negro, living constantly at tiptoe stance, never quite knowing what to expect next, and are plagued with inner fears and outer resentments; when you are forever fighting a degenerating sense of 'nobodiness'—then you will understand why we find it difficult to wait."

We no longer live in that America.

In 1964, King gave an interview to the BBC where he predicted there could be a Black president in "less than 40 years. I would think that this can come in 25 years or less." Just about right on the 40-year schedule, America elected Barack Obama.

King did not say that in less than 40 years' time, there will have been a Black female president of an Ivy League college—which we have had. He did not say in 40 years, they'll be a Black CEO of a Fortune 500 company; there have been several, including the former CEO of McDonald's. King didn't say in 40 years, there will be a Black governor of a state like Virginia, the capital state of the Confederacy—which has happened. He didn't say when 80% of Blacks will no longer be poor, which is now the case.

No, King suggested that we will have reached the promised land when America elects a Black president. Why? Because in the privacy of the voting booth or the mail-in ballot, one can vote however one wants. If a voter is racist, he or she can vote accordingly. King felt when Americans became fair-minded enough to elect a Black person whom they felt qualified for the presidency, we then have reached a point where we are evaluating each other based on content of our character, rather than color of skin, to the fullest degree realistically possible.

Far more important than the issue of reparations is this: Why has the rate of out-of-wedlock births in the Black community nearly tripled from 1965 until now, when America is clearly less racist now than 56 years ago? Even during slavery, a Black child was more likely to live under a roof with his or her biological mother and biological father than today. This makes linking today's problems to slavery and Jim Crow all the more difficult.

In 1965, 24% of Black children were born outside of wedlock. In 2018—the latest year available—that number was 69%. On Father's Day in 2008, Barack Obama said: "We know the statistics—that children who grow up without a father are five times more likely to live in poverty and commit crime; nine times more likely to drop out of schools and 20 times more likely to end up in prison."

Finally, Obama, when asked about reparations in 2016, said:

"It is easy to make that theoretical argument. But as a practical matter, it is hard to think of any society in human history in which a majority population has said that as a consequence of historic wrongs, we are now going to take a big chunk of the nation's resources over a long period of time to make that right."

He was right.

An article by Dennis Prager titled "Most American Schools Are Damaging Your Child" was posted at townhall.com on March 9, 2021. Following is the article.

I have been telling parents for decades that sending a child to almost any college is playing Russian roulette with his or her values.

But it is a different version of Russian roulette. In the traditional version, only one of the gun's six chambers contains a bullet. In the college version of Russian roulette, 5 of the 6 chambers contain a bullet. If your child attends almost any university in America (or Canada or anywhere else in the English-speaking world), the odds are that your child's decency, intellectual acuity, faculty of reason, character and moral compass will be damaged, perhaps permanently.

The worse news is that sending your child to almost any elementary school or high school—public or private—is fast becoming equally toxic. More and more schools are being taken over by left-wing ideologues and by nonideologues who lack the courage to confront the ideologues.

Once infected with leftism, these schools teach children to hate reason, tradition, America, Christianity, whites, excellence, freedom and masculinity. To cite one example, thanks to a million-dollar grant from Bill Gates through his Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, the Oregon Education Department has announced that teaching there is "one right answer" in math—yes, in math—is an expression of white supremacy. Why, then, would an Oregon parent who cares about his or her child's mind, send that child to an Oregon school?

In addition to perverting education, teachers and their unions have exhibited a contempt for children that has taken even conservatives by surprise. Teachers' unwillingness to show up in class for more than a year is as unscientific as it is unprecedented. On Feb. 3, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Director Dr. Rochelle Walensky told reporters during a White House news briefing that teachers do not need to get vaccinated against covid-19 before schools can safely reopen: "There is increasing data to suggest that schools can safely reopen and that safe reopening does not suggest that teachers need to be vaccinated. Vaccinations of teachers is not a prerequisite for safely reopening schools."

Nevertheless, in the country's major cities, these cowards and hypochondriacs—people who claim to care more than anything else about their students—have refused to return to school (while demanding to be paid). They have refused to teach, despite the facts that child-to-teacher transmission of the covid-19 virus is extremely rare and a teacher being hospitalized, let alone dying, as a result of interaction with students is rarer than a teacher dying in a traffic accident on the way to school. Why, then, would you send your child to be "taught" by people for whom you have—or should have—so little respect?

Why would you send your young child to a school that sponsors a "Drag Queen Story Hour" or that dwells on "nonbinary" gender identity? Do you think such things do not damage your child's innocence? Do you want your child to be challenged about his or her sexual identity?

Why would you send your child to any school that teaches The New York Times' "1619 Project"? This project holds that America was not founded in 1776 but in 1619, with the arrival of the first black slaves in North America, and that the Revolutionary War was fought not to gain independence from Britain but to preserve slavery. Virtually every leading historian specializing in American history—most of whom are liberals and Democrats, and some of whom were anti-Trump activists—have labeled "The 1619 Project" a lie.

Whenever I meet adults who hold traditional American values, I ask them three questions:

- The first is, "Do you have children?"
- If they do, my second question is, "How many of them share your values?" It is not common to meet people all of whose children share their parents' traditional values.
- If they respond that any of their children do not share their values, my third question is, "What happened?"

In every instance, these parents attribute the alienation of their child(ren) from their (the parents') values to the college and, increasingly, the high school their child attended.

Moreover, not only are these children alienated from their parents' values, but they are often also alienated from the parent(s). One thing you learn when you become left-wing is to have contempt for those who hold other beliefs.

Had these parents known how their children would turn out, they would never have sent them to college—or even to the high school they attended. It appears, however, that no matter how many people lose their children's hearts and minds to left-wing indoctrination, and no matter how much information accumulates about the perversion of education in American schools, parents continue to take risks with their children they would never take in any other sphere.

I am well aware of the enormous obstacles. If your child wishes to study STEM (science, technology, engineering, math) or law, college remains a necessity. Otherwise, it isn't.

As for elementary and high school, parents must either find a school that teaches reading, writing and arithmetic rather than America-hatred, or they should home-school their child. This, understandably, sounds terribly daunting. However, it is becoming considerably easier to do so as home-school groups and quality home-school curricula proliferate around the country.

Whatever your decision, never say you weren't warned.

An article by Michelle Malkin titled "The Nuking of the American Nuclear Family" was posted at creators.com on March 9, 2021. Following is the article.

"Gay poly throuple makes history, lists 3 dads on a birth certificate." That's an actual headline from The New York Post, which last week featured an unsettling trio of men who recruited two female friends to help them conceive and deliver a baby girl named Piper.

Piper is now 3 years old and has a 1-year-old brother named Parker. According to the "gay poly throuple," Piper told her preschool classmates how proud she was of her plentiful progenitors by bragging: "You have two parents. I have three parents."

Actually, the "throuple" is really a quintet. If you count Piper's egg donor and birth surrogate, we've now traveled from "Heather Has Two Mommies" (the infamous children's book normalizing same-sex adoptions published in 1989) to "Piper Has Five Parents." And in 2021, if you have any discomfort or reservations at all about the nuking of the nuclear family by throuples or quadrouples or dozenouples, then woke society tells us there's something wrong with us, not them.

Dr. Ian Jenkins, one of Piper's polyamorous pops, wrote in a newly released book about their "adventures in modern parenting" that the arrangement is "just not a big deal." Nothing to see here, move along. Two, three, whatever. "Some people seem to think it's about a ton of sex or something," Jenkins complained, "or we're unstable and must do crazy things. (But) it's really remarkably ordinary and domestic in our house and definitely not 'Tiger King' (the creepy Netflix hit series about convicted murder-for-hire zookeeper Joe Exotic, who headed up a three-way "marriage" to two men).

Weirdly, one of Piper's other dads, Jeremy, is also a zookeeper like Joe Exotic whom the other two met through an online dating service. All very "remarkably ordinary and domestic." Ho-hum.

Neighborhoods, cities and nations are safer, healthier and more prosperous where nuclear families are the norm. But for the sake of social justice and modern progressivism, we are all just supposed to shake our heads politely and keep our alarm about the sexual slippery slope to ourselves. As University of Virginia sociologist W. Bradford Wilcox summarized in a 2020 article reviewing the benefits of two-parent married households for The Atlantic magazine, "sadly, adults who are unrelated to children are much more likely to abuse or neglect them than their own parents are."

Never mind all the scientific studies showing an elevated risk of child sexual abuse in households where children live with unrelated adults. Never mind the CDC data showing that introducing men unrelated to the children in a family elevates the risk of physical, sexual and emotional abuse of those children by about nine times higher than the rate experienced by children raised in normal, stable nuclear family of married biological parents and their children.

In a separate report for the Institute for Family Studies, Wilcox found that the very types of highly educated California liberals who publicly promote and support "alternative" family structures across pop culture and in the political arena are themselves more committed to traditional marriage and nuclear families for their own children. But don't you dare question their extreme and dangerous perversity. Look at what happened to grassroots social conservative Lauren Witzke, the former Senate GOP candidate in Delaware. She was suspended from Twitter last week after exposing a left-wing transgender zealot named Alok Vaid-Menon, who tweeted derisively to traditional parents objecting to transgender bathroom laws that "little girls are also kinky."

Witzke called the statement "demonic," which Twitter determined was "hateful conduct" that violated its terms of service.

While Twitter has been purging pro-family, pro-life users from its platform for years, it encouraged discussions of "attraction towards minors," including the posting of nude photos of children. The policy (only rescinded last fall after a massive backlash) embraced pedophiles as "minor-attracted persons." Even more perverse is that elite Republican figures are using their Silicon Valley platforms to attack vocal Christian dissidents instead of supporting them. Witzke came under fire last week from President Donald Trump's gay former ambassador to Germany, Ric Grenell, and gay black TPUSA contributor Rob Smith for criticizing their promotion of transgenderism and the LGBTQXYZ agenda.

"The Republican Party has remained stagnant as conservatives are being silenced by Big Tech, out of the fear of losing the support of their big corporate donors," Witzke told me. "The GOP is no longer the Party of God, Family and Traditional Marriage. They are now corporate slaves to progressivism, transgenderism and compromise.”

Once again, our “friends” are our own worst enemies. Accommodation is the downfall of political parties and crumbling civilizations. The children always pay the highest price.

An article by Ben Shapiro titled “Why Dr. Seuss Had to Go” was posted at creators.com on March 10, 2021. Following is the article.

This week, Dr. Seuss Enterprises announced it would stop the sale and distribution of six classic volumes from the great children’s author. Those volumes, said the company, violate its commitment to “messages of hope, inspiration, inclusion, and friendship.” The books include portrayals of people “in ways that are hurtful and wrong.”

Society has long held that activity that damages others ought to be curbed. John Stuart Mill posited the so-called harm principle—the belief that activity that harms someone ought to be condemned or even barred—in the mid-19th century. But Mill refused to conflate harm and offense: Being offended wasn’t cause for sanction of another.

Broadly speaking, society agreed with this formulation. But in the past few years, this formulation has been completely turned on its head. Now offense is not only considered a harm; it is considered the chief harm in our society. Physical injury, after all, is merely physical. But mental or emotional injury—that threatens our very sense of identity. Because we find our identity in our own sense of self-creation, any societal denial of that sense threatens our identity. As Carl Trueman writes in “The Rise and Triumph of the Modern Self”: “The era of psychological man therefore requires changes in the culture and its institutions, practice, and beliefs that affect everyone. They all need to adapt to reflect a therapeutic mentality that focuses on the psychological well-being of the individual.”

When individual self-creation becomes the chief goal of a society, institutions must be torn down—institutions, after all, foster a set of rules that may not be conducive to individual self-creation. Informational flow must be dammed—after all, information may allow others to take a different, objectively based opinion about you than you take subjectively about yourself. Books must be burned—after all, books carry with them implicit messages that may threaten your sense of yourself.

Iconoclasm becomes the order of the day.

Our societal turn from actual, measurable harm toward subjective, psychological harm places us on the road to complete devastation of our culture and our rights. Now anyone who offends—or even has the potential to offend—can be, and indeed ought to be, fired. Now any book—no matter how old or how inoffensive—can be, and indeed ought to be, banned. Now any kernel of information—no matter how true—can be discarded.

This formulation puts all power in the hands of those who are most easily offended—or at least those who claim to be. The offense itself is the weapon. Legal torts require damages; societal torts merely require a claim of damages, without evidence. No one can explain just how a drawing in “If I Ran the Zoo” has contributed to actual racism; there are no recorded incidents of a single white supremacist citing “And to Think That I Saw It on Mulberry Street” as a formative source in his racist worldview. But any academic with a computer and a degree in postmodern nonsense can take those books off the shelves simply by claiming that offense is possible .

In the end, the only literature allowed will be the literature that adheres to the values of our postmodern world—a world in which we are not expected to conform to societal rules but society is expected to conform to our own acts of self-definition. That means your child reading “I Am Jazz” but never—never, Gaia forbid!—the Bible. It means goodbye to cultural icons, large and small—goodbye to all vestiges of the past, replete with their “bigoted” value systems.

It means that the purges have only just begun.

An article by Ann Coulter titled “Rule by Left-Wing Lunatics” was posted at anncoulter.com on March 10, 2021. Following is the article.

A governing principle of the Democratic Party is to ask, “Who is in the dock?” before deciding whether to enforce the law.

As we have seen throughout the last year of antifa/BLM riots, in blue states, it’s now legal to commit arson, attempted murder, assault on a law enforcement officer and destruction of property—provided the perp is antifa or antifa-friendly. Andy Ngo’s smash bestseller “Unmasked” gives chapter and verse on antifa’s shocking violence untouched by criminal penalty.

On the other hand, if you’re a conservative, don’t commit a misdemeanor in a blue state. Proud Boys, Capitol Hill protesters, police and other presumed Trump supporters are getting more prison time than actual murderers for minor infractions. Even a couple of personal injury lawyers (liberals) are being criminally prosecuted in St. Louis for brandishing guns at violent looters coming toward their home. The rioters, you see, were BLM protesters.

In all these cases, local Democratic officials gleefully announce that they are locking up “white supremacists.”

Prepare yourself for a lot of witch-trial hysteria in the upcoming trials of Derek Chauvin in Minneapolis and the Capitol Hill trespassers in Washington, D.C. We’ve already seen it with the Proud Boys in New York City.

In a nation of laws, a crime is a crime, and it shouldn't matter whether it's committed by Mother Teresa or Charles Manson, but, as long as they brought it up, OF COURSE THE PROUD BOYS AREN'T "WHITE SUPREMACISTS"!

The organization is a tongue-in-cheek men's group, promoting masculinity and Western civilization in humorous ways. Most of what they tell members is healthy: Get out of your apartment, work out, get a girlfriend and don't masturbate. Further aside that it annoys me to have to make: There are African Americans, American Indians, immigrants and loads of Mexicans in the Proud Boys. Pretty crappy membership drive for a "hate group."

At least in the witch trials of the Middle Ages, you could prove you weren't a witch by drowning after being tied up and heaved into a nearby body of water. Today, the "white supremacist" hex is indelible. The accusation is the proof. And once accused, stay out of the blue states, or you might end up in prison.

In 2018, the night before Proud Boys founder, Gavin McInnes, was scheduled to give a speech at the Metropolitan Republican Club on the Upper East Side of New York, antifa smashed the windows of the historic club with a brick, glued the lock, and spray-painted the anarchist "A" on the front door of the club's townhouse, along with a threat that this destruction was "merely a beginning." All that's legal, too—provided it's done by antifa.

The day of the speech, 80 masked antifa goons showed up at the club to attack attendees—women and children, young and old. But unfortunately for antifa, the event was being protected by the Proud Boys. McInnes' speech went off without a hitch, and no attendees were injured at the event.

When it was over, New York police officers directed the Proud Boys to Park Avenue, and sent antifa in the opposite direction to Lexington. The Proud Boys followed orders, but a gang of six masked antifa circled around from Lexington over to Park to confront them, including, in antifa's manly way, throwing a bottle of urine at them.

Two Proud Boys proceeded to kick six antifa butt.

The same thing happened a few blocks south. Again disobeying the police, another group of antifa cut over to Park Avenue to fight with the Proud Boys. They, too, received a solid ass-kicking.

So who was arrested? Ten Proud Boys and not one antifa. Oh darn. We couldn't catch them. (Hey, NYPD! Send the Proud Boys next time.)

The police did manage to arrest three antifa thugs who followed one speech attendee leaving the event, punched him and stole his backpack. But it turns out that's also legal in New York. The antifa were arrested for the violent attack . . . then immediately released with no charges.

The governor and attorney general of New York, the New York City mayor and a slew of council members rushed to social media to denounce the Proud Boys for "hate" and vow to prosecute them—for protecting Upper East Side

Republicans who went to a speech. McInnes is funny, and if there's one thing leftists cannot abide, it's a sense of humor.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo tweeted: "Hate cannot and will not be tolerated in New York," along with a brain-dead article from BuzzFeed News titled, "Members of a Far-Right Men's Group Violently Beat Up Protesters and Weren't Arrested. New York Police Won't Say Why." They're WHITE, aren't they? No? Well, they're REPUBLICANS. Arrest them!

The prosecution had no victims and no evidence of injury. But two Proud Boys, John Kinsman and Max Hare, now sit in a New York state prison, sentenced to four years, after being convicted of attempted assault and attempted gang assault—for defending themselves from antifa, who showed up at conservative event, then disobeyed the police and stalked the Proud Boys. It wasn't the Proud Boys disrupting an antifa event, and it wasn't the Proud Boys defying the police to confront antifa.

Yes, you are correct: This was the same district attorney, Cyrus Vance, who allowed Harvey Weinstein and Jeffrey Epstein to rape and molest young girls in his jurisdiction for years and years. But those guys were major Democratic donors, so no harm, no foul.

A third Proud Boy was headed to trial along with Kinsman and Hare—until the prosecution noticed he was East Indian and his presence would have hurt the narrative that Proud Boys are "white supremacists."

Just no one mention Kinsman's black wife and children. (And thus Democrats deprived three more black children of a father during their formative years.)

Much of the testimony elicited by the prosecutor, Joshua Steinglass, concerned the defendants' non-PC beliefs, e.g.: Kinsman's support for guns, his opposition to antifa, and his attendance at a "fake news" protest outside CNN. Steinglass actually presented evidence of McInnes' jokes from his comedy show. Inappropriate laughter in a blue state will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law!

What on earth does any of that have to do with whether Kinsman and Hare committed a crime at Park Avenue and 82nd on Oct. 12, 2018?

Nothing. In the blue states, there is no rule of law, only rule by left-wing lunatics.

An article by Adam Weiss titled "The Media Could Have Saved Lives if They Covered Cuomo Half as Critically as They Did Trump's Ice Cream" was posted at townhall.com on March 9, 2021. Following is the article.

While tens of thousands of elderly New Yorkers were dying lonely deaths without their loved ones by their sides during the first months of the coronavirus pandemic, the media didn't skip a beat gushing over "Love Gov" Andrew Cuomo.

If they had, they could have potentially saved thousands of lives.

In 2017, President Donald Trump invited reporters, including CNN, to a dinner at the White House as a gesture of goodwill to get to know them. Nobody can tell you what happened during that dinner, about any interesting tidbits journalists may have learned about what was happening at the top level of our government, but they can tell you how many scoops of ice cream the president consumed.

This is because for weeks following the dinner, there were hundreds of stories about how President Trump had two scoops of ice cream, while everyone else had one. Nobody asked for a second, of course, but the implication was that the president is rude and thoughtless, punishing the misbehaving media by giving them less ice cream.

If Cuomo's handling of the coronavirus had faced half the level of scrutiny that the ice cream did, perhaps the public would have been informed and been able to protect themselves and their elderly loved ones. Instead, the governor was granted gushing segments with his brother on CNN, given an undeserved Emmy, and paraded around as the hero—up against the villain Trump.

Instead of asking questions and digging for answers, the media ran cover for Cuomo as New Yorkers suffered. The state is now a shell of the beautiful place that it once was.

The governor was even given a book deal on leadership by Crown Publishing that made the bestsellers list. No publisher in their right mind would have touched this if the media had been doing their job properly.

The dishonest partisan media knows the revelations about what was going on in nursing homes was disastrous for their reputations, perhaps that is why they are still avoiding coverage of it. Instead, they have focused nearly all of their attention on the sexual harassment claims against him, while continuing to avoid the blood that dripped from Cuomo's hands onto their own.

According to a study published by the Media Research Center, "from the first network evening news mention of Cuomo's nursing home scandal nearly ten months ago (on the May 11, 2020 NBC Nightly News) through Sunday night, the ABC, CBS and NBC evening newscasts have devoted a mere 15 minutes, 35 seconds to the story—most of which came after the January 28, 2021 report by the state's Attorney General, Letitia James, charging that the Cuomo administration vastly under-reported nursing home deaths.

"In contrast, in just the past 11 days those same broadcasts have devoted almost three times as much coverage—44 minutes, 14 seconds—on allegations from several women that Cuomo sexually harassed them in recent years," the report continued.

This isn't an accident. Nobody in their right mind could possibly think that his highly inappropriate flirting is as bad as covering up the numbers of elderly nursing home residents who died after he forced the facilities to take people who tested positive for the virus. It is awful and reprehensible of course, but deserving of more coverage than 50,000 dead New Yorkers? Doubtful.

The only explanation for the corporate media's bizarre prioritizing of coverage is that somewhere deep down they must know that their rush to valorize him aided and abetted his crimes.

If only the media cared as much about their grandparents as they did about Trump's ice cream. Who knows how different things could have been.

Isaiah 55:6-11—“Seek you the LORD while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the LORD, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. ‘For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,’ says the LORD. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word be that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”
