Following are excerpts of the article.

The nation’s nuclear arsenal includes around 400 Minuteman III intercontinental ballistic missiles (which can carry several warheads each with the explosive power of 335,000 tons of TNT) and around 3,000 more tactical nuclear weapons.

The U.S. is constantly working to update and maintain its nuclear arsenal and it is estimated between $280 billion and $350 billion will be spent across the next two decades on this upkeep.

Here, DailyMail.com outlines the work carried out by some of the country’s leading nuclear weapons development facilities.

- Los Alamos National Laboratory, New Mexico

Arguably the nation’s best-known nuclear research facility, Los Alamos is one of the birthplaces of the atomic bomb and remains a key facility for nuclear weapons research, development and simulation.

Los Alamos conducts experiments to ensure the safety, security and effectiveness of the nation’s nuclear arsenal.

The site is famously known as the birthplace of the Manhattan Project – a top secret mission of the U.S. government during World War II. The Manhattan Project developed the first atomic bombs.

J. Robert Oppenheimer (often referred to as the “father of the atomic bomb”) played a central role in the Manhattan Project. His role was the subject of the 2022 blockbuster Oppenheimer.

He was appointed as the scientific director of the Los Alamos Laboratory and led the efforts to design and build the atomic bombs that were ultimately used in the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki – the only nuclear weapons ever deployed in war.

The lab has an annual budget of around $4.6 billion and is managed as part of the country’s National Nuclear Security Administration.

The facility, which employs around 14,000 people, develops four of the country’s seven nuclear bombs – the B61 gravity bomb (which is deployed to aircraft); the W78 (which is fired within the Minuteman III); the W76 (launched by submarine); and W88 (launched by submarine).

- Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory

Lawrence Livermore (about 50 miles east of downtown San Francisco) focuses on nuclear weapons design, engineering and testing – as well as developing advanced technologies to enhance the performance and reliability of the nation’s nuclear deterrent.

A key part of the laboratory is its “Superblock” facility – one of only two defense plutonium research and development facilities in the country.

The Superblock houses state-of-the-art equipment for measuring the physical, chemical and metallurgical qualities of special nuclear materials – such as highly enriched uranium, plutonium and tritium.

Founded in 1952, it was named after physicist Ernest O. Lawrence (inventor of the cyclotron particle accelerator machine) and is located in Livermore, California.

- Waste Isolation Pilot Plant (WIPP)

Located in New Mexico, WIPP is the nation’s only deep geological repository for the permanent disposal of defense-generated transuranic radioactive waste.

The site operates in a salt bed formation approximately 2,150 feet (655 meters) underground, isolating radioactive materials from the environment for thousands of years.

The repository is situated in a stable geological formation known as the Salado Formation.

WIPP began operations in March 1999, after more than 20 years of planning, development, and regulatory approvals. It is operated by the U.S. Department of Energy and is managed by the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant Management and Operations Contractor.

The plant primarily stores transuranic radioactive waste (TRU waste), which includes materials contaminated with man-made elements heavier than uranium, such as plutonium.

This waste often originates from the production and maintenance of nuclear weapons, as well as from other activities related to nuclear research, development, and cleanup efforts.

TRU waste can include various items such as gloves, tools, clothing, and equipment used in nuclear facilities – as well as contaminated soil and debris.

- Pantex Plant near Amarillo, Texas

The Pantex Plant is the primary facility responsible for the assembly, disassembly and maintenance of the nation’s nuclear weapons stockpile. (The Pantex Plant is where the majority of bombs in America’s roughly 4,000-strong nuclear arsenal were built. The plant, which has around 4,000 employees, plays a crucial role in the nation's nuclear weapons project. It is where the majority of bombs are built – using parts from the other facilities around America.)

It is also involved in the development of high-explosive components for nuclear warheads.

Pantex is responsible for the assembly of new nuclear weapons as well as the disassembly of retired or excess weapons. It plays a crucial role in ensuring the safety, security, and reliability of the U.S. nuclear arsenal.

Parts designed and built at other facilities around the country are brought here to complete the weapons.

The facility was temporarily closed on February 21 after the worst wildfires in Texas history raged around the facility. It reopened several hours later.

- Kansas City National Security Campus

This campus, in Missouri, is responsible for manufacturing and procuring non-nuclear components of nuclear weapons (such as electronic and mechanical parts) as well as providing engineering and logistics support for the nuclear weapons program.

The facility is operated by Honeywell Federal Manufacturing & Technologies, LLC, under contract with the National Nuclear Security Administration (a semi-autonomous agency within the United States Department of Energy).

The plant's output includes high-tech sensors, precision machined components, and specialized materials.

- Y-12 National Security Complex in Oak Ridge, Tennessee

Y-12 plays a crucial role in uranium processing, enrichment, and manufacturing components for nuclear weapons. It also conducts research and development to enhance the safety and reliability of the nuclear stockpile.

The facility has a rich history dating back to World War II, when it was part of the Manhattan Project. It was originally established to produce enriched uranium for the first atomic bombs, including those dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

The facility plays a crucial role in the production and processing of enriched uranium, which is a key component in the manufacture of nuclear weapons.

- Sandia National Laboratories (with locations in New Mexico and California)

Sandia is a multi-disciplinary research institution specializing in nuclear weapons design, engineering, and testing. It also provides technical expertise in nuclear security and non-proliferation. The facility is described as the “engineering arm of the U.S. nuclear weapons enterprise.”

According to its mission statement: “We weaponize the nuclear explosive package to create an effective and sustainable nuclear deterrent. Sandia’s foundation is science-based engineering, in which fundamental science, computer models, and unique experimental facilities come together so researchers can understand, predict, and verify weapon systems performance.”

- 90th Missile Wing at F.E. Warren Air Force Base – near Cheyenne, Wyoming

America’s Minuteman III ICBMs are held at launch sites on at least three U.S. Air Force bases. These missiles can carry up to three nuclear warheads – each with as much explosive power as 335,000 tons of TNT.

The Minuteman III can reach speeds of up to 15,000 miles per hour (which is 23 times the speed of sound) and has a range of more than 6,000 miles.

Some are kept at the 90th Missile Wing at F.E. Warren Air Force Base near Cheyenne Wyoming (which is one of the oldest continuously active military installations in the United States, initially established in 1867).

The primary mission of the 90th Missile Wing is to maintain and operate the ICBMs in a state of readiness, ensuring they are ready to respond to any potential threats to national security at a moment’s notice.

The 90th Missile Wing comprises military personnel, civilian employees, and contractors who work together to carry out the wing’s mission. This includes missile operators, security forces, maintenance crews, and support staff who ensure the smooth functioning of operations.

- 341st Missile Wing at Malmstrom AFB – near Great Falls, Montana

Similar to the 90th Missile Wing, the 341st Missile Wing operates Minutemen III ICBMs.

Malmstrom Air Force Base covers a vast area and is home to a significant portion of the United States’ land-based missile arsenal.

The 341st Missile Wing has a rich history dating back to its activation in 1947. It has played crucial roles in the Cold War and continues to maintain a high state of readiness to address modern security challenges.

In addition to maintaining and operating Minuteman III ICBMs, the 341st Missile Wing is also tasked with providing security for its missile fields and ensuring the safety and security of its personnel and assets.

The wing conducts regular training exercises to ensure the proficiency of its personnel in handling and operating ICBMs.

Like other missile wings in the U.S. Air Force, the 341st Missile Wing is involved in modernization efforts to upgrade its missile systems, infrastructure, and support equipment to meet evolving security requirements and technological advancements.

- 91st Missile Wing at Minot AFB (North Dakota)

Minot Air Force Base is situated in Ward County, North Dakota, and is also responsible for operating Minuteman III ICBMs.

The primary mission of the 91st Missile Wing is to ensure the readiness and reliability of its assigned ICBMs, contributing to the national security strategy of deterrence against potential adversaries.

Regular training exercises are conducted to ensure the proficiency and readiness of personnel in handling and operating ICBMs. These exercises simulate various scenarios to prepare for potential contingencies and maintain a high state of readiness.

An article by Victor Davis Hanson titled “American Paralysis and Decline” was posted at dailycaller.com on Feb. 29, 2024. Following is the article.

“We can bear neither our diseases nor their remedies.”

So shrugged the ancient historian Livy (59 B.C. – A.D. 17) of the long decline of Roman national character that, in his age, finally ended the Roman Republic.

Like a patient whose medicine proves worse than the disease, Livy lamented that the Romans knew that they had become corrupt and lawless.

But the very contemplation of the hard medicine needed for restoration (and the furious reaction that would meet the remedy) made it impossible to save the patient.

America is nearing such an impasse.

We know that no state can long exist after opening its borders to over seven million illegal aliens, requiring neither background checks nor legality.

The recent murder of a Georgia female jogger by an illegal alien and the savage beating of New York policemen by similar others hardly merit media attention.

Everyone knows that neither new appropriations nor new laws are needed to secure the border as it was in 2020.

Instead, we could just stop suicidal catch-and-release, deport lawbreakers, privilege the legal over the illegal immigrant, demand would-be refugees apply for asylum first in their native countries, finish the border wall, and pressure Mexico to stop undermining the territorial integrity of its northern neighbor.

But then we shrug, “We can’t do that” – paralyzed in fear of being smeared as “xenophobic,” “nativist,” or “racist.”

So this generation apparently feels that it can endure the collateral damage of daily assaults on American citizens, the near bankruptcy of our cities, and 100,000 fentanyl deaths per year – but certainly not the idea that it is somehow not politically correct or compassionate.

The same is true of the $35 trillion debt, now costing more than $1 trillion a year in interest payments – and growing. We all know it is unsustainable. Americans understand it will eventually lead to either destructive hyperinflation, suicidal renunciation of federal debt, or confiscation of private savings.

Yet we ignore the reckless spending and keep borrowing well over $1 trillion a year. Apparently, our generation prefers being praised as “virtuous” and “caring.” So it leaves the next generation to be smeared as “cruel” and “unfair” when it is forced to cut federal entitlements and bloated government or face civilizational collapse.

The crime epidemic is also similar. Everyone accepts that no society can long endure quasi-legalized shoplifting or green-lighting smash-and-grabbers and carjackers to be released without bail.

But we assume that such a civilizational implosion will never reach our own sanctuary neighborhoods or safe places of work – at least not yet.

We also know that restoring deterrence by arresting, convicting, and jailing repeat felons will return safety to our streets.

But again, we fear even more that advocating “law and order” will earn slanders like “racist” or “reactionary.”

Ditto the homeless. In an age of self-congratulation and hyper-environmentalism, we know that a million homeless defecating, urinating, injecting, and assaulting on our downtown sidewalks and storefronts is medieval. We know that it is illegal to camp out on the street and publicly harass citizens or relieve oneself in public.

And we know the cure lies in building and staffing more mental institutions and providing areas far from public spaces where the homeless can find shelter, sanitation, and medical care.

But the very idea of removing anyone from his accustomed sidewalk spot, or the notion of the use of force to transport the mentally ill to proper and humane facilities, terrifies us. So we walk around, step over, and ignore those on the street. Is the assumption that the odds of being assaulted or sickened acceptable? Or do we just wish to learn where the flotsam, jetsam, and human offal of the street end up?

- Most accept that had former President Donald Trump just not run for president in 2024 or was a man of the left, he would not now be facing four different felony court cases.
- Most accept that three of the four prosecutors have either in advance promised to get Trump or have proved grossly unethical.

Most know it is wrong to try to remove a leading presidential candidate from state ballots. Yet many shrug that this new weaponization of America's legal system is the flamboyant Trump's own problem, not their own. So they ignore the third-worldization of our political system, which they quietly acknowledge is otherwise leading us to a Venezuela-like mess.

The paralysis of American society extends to our foreign policy as well. We deplore the terrorism of Iran and its thuggish surrogates. But we fear more the nasty, costly business of stopping its aggression.

Societies do not always collapse from a lack of wealth, invasion, or natural catastrophes.

Most often, they know what is destroying them. But they are so paralyzed by their fear that the road to salvation becomes too painful to even contemplate.

So they implode gradually, then suddenly.

Isaiah 55:6-11—"Seek you the Lord while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the Lord, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. 'For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,' says the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word by that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it."
