Luke 21:34-36—“But take heed to yourselves, lest your souls be weighed down with self-indulgence, and drunkenness, or the anxieties of this life, and that day come on you suddenly, like a falling trap; for it will come on all dwellers on the face of the whole earth. But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take your stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

An article by Mariane Angela titled “ ‘Completely New Territory’: Victor Davis Hanson Says Economists Who Blasted Tariffs Don’t Know as Much as They Claim” was posted at dailycaller.com on July 25, 2025. Following is the article.

Victor Davis Hanson appeared on Fox Business Friday [July 25] and took aim at critics of the Trump administration’s trade policies – particularly those who predicted economic turmoil in the wake of tariff increases.

Corporate media repeatedly predicted price hikes from President Donald Trump’s tariffs, but those forecasts have proven wrong as inflation remained steady despite the 10% duties imposed after a 90-day pause.

During his appearance on “Kudlow,” Hanson said that the very economists who opposed tariffs were missing key realities about the global economy.

Hanson told host Larry Kudlow: “I think we’re in the new frontier, Larry. We’ve never been before. We don’t know at what rate of profit our foreign policy, our foreign partners are racking up these surpluses. Apparently, if it’s a moderate 10 to 15% tariff, they can eat that without jacking up prices and pricing themselves out of this lucrative consumer market.”

Beyond tariffs, Hanson said other major policy shifts have economists scratching their heads.

Hanson added: “There’s things that are going on in progress, Larry, that we’ve never seen before. We don’t know the economic ramifications when people in the administration say there may be $10 trillion to $15 trillion in new foreign investments. The entire market capitalization of Silicon Valley is only $9 trillion. That's a lot. So we're talking about numbers we've never really encountered, and that's besides the big, beautiful bill, taxes on remittances worldwide, taxes on endowments."

Hanson said that the ongoing shifts in U.S. policy are entering uncharted territory. He pointed to new developments that even the experts failed to foresee.

Hanson said: "So there's all sorts of new developments. I don't think the experts have expertise. We don't know the ramifications economically when the Department of Interior or the EPA say they're going to lessen the red tape from a two-year application process for a permit down to 21 days – or what the ramifications are of a million self-deportation (many of whom are on public assistance). So, I think we're just in completely new territory that the economists thought they were familiar with, and they weren't."

On March 26, ABC News cited "experts" who warned that fresh tariffs would escalate the global trade war, raise consumer prices, and risk an economic slowdown. Despite these predictions, CNBC said on May 13 that inflation had eased in April, though it cautioned that prices could rise as the tariffs took full effect. Inflation, however, continued to rise less than expected in May – reaching a four-year low.

On June 20, CNN said that predictions of tariff-driven inflation had not come to fruition – pointing out that the tariff-induced price spike many economists feared had yet to materialize.

Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent said that the Consumer Price Index and Producer Price Index both rose by just 0.1% in May, according to Bureau of Labor Statistics data.

Additionally, the U.S. economy exceeded expectations by adding 147,000 nonfarm payroll jobs in June – surpassing the projected 106,000.

An article by Nikk Ogasa titled "Why Devastating Tsunamis Didn't Follow the Russia Earthquake" was posted at sciencenews.com on July 30, 2025. Following is the article.

When a magnitude 8.8 earthquake struck offshore of the Kamchatka Peninsula in eastern Russia on July 29, tsunami warnings quickly followed. The quake is tied with two other historic temblors to be the sixth largest ever recorded – sparking fears of devastating waves like the ones that followed the 2011 Tohoku temblor in Japan and the 2004 Indian Ocean quake. But so far, the tsunami waves have been nowhere near as catastrophic.

Multiple factors can influence how tsunamis manifest on distant shores – from the geology of the initial quake to the shape of the coastline. Here's what we know so far about the Russia megaquake and why the resulting tsunamis have been less destructive than feared.

- This quake occurred in a seismic hotbed

The powerful earthquake occurred in a subduction zone – where one tectonic plate dives under another. In these settings, vast amounts of energy build up on large faults (called megathrusts) between the plates.

That energy is periodically and suddenly released in violent earthquakes. Subduction zones are associated with the largest temblors on Earth, including the ones in Japan and the Indian Ocean.

This quake occurred about 21 kilometers deep along the Kuril-Kamchatka subduction zone. There, the Pacific plate slides under the Okhotsk plate at a rate of about 75 millimeters each year – which is relatively fast in geological terms. What's more, this plate boundary forms a relatively shallow angle in the rock that's closer to horizontal than not.

- Geologist Rich Briggs (of the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colorado) said: “That means you have a lot of area that is at the right temperature and at the right depth for conditions to slip.”

Essentially, the powerful temblor occurred in a region that's known for being “an earthquake factory,” Briggs said. “It's a place where a lot of things come together to host earthquakes.”

- Kamchatka experienced a magnitude 7.4 quake less than two weeks ago.
- Kamchatka experienced a magnitude 7.1 last year.
- It also produced the fifth largest quake in history – a magnitude 9.0 in 1952.

Geologist Lisa McNeill of the University of Southampton in the United Kingdom issued a statement: “What we don't know yet is exactly how this earthquake rupture today relates in space to these previous large earthquakes (such as the one in 1952), but it appears to be filling in a gap on the fault zone, releasing the energy stored there.”

Hours after the earthquake, the Klyuchevskoy volcano on the Kamchatka Peninsula started erupting. It's the largest active volcano in the Northern Hemisphere and one of the most active in the region. But it's difficult to say whether the quake caused the eruption, Briggs says.

Briggs continued: “There have been lots of earthquakes that have not caused eruptions, so in this case where there's [ongoing activity], it's hard to untangle what the relationship is.”

- How this quake birthed tsunamis

The Russia quake did trigger tsunamis, though they weren't as destructive as those produced by some other megathrust quakes. Offshore temblors can whip up powerful waves, and this is especially true for subduction zone earthquakes – which can lift large areas of the seafloor and displace vast amounts of water.

Notably, the Kamchatka earthquake's point of origin (or its hypocenter) was located at a relatively shallow depth in the crust – about 21 kilometers deep. When a really large fault area that's located close to the seafloor gets pushed up, it can raise a huge body of water and trigger a tsunami, Briggs said.

Waves of around 3 to 5 meters high reportedly struck the Kamchatka Peninsula – with video footage showing the coastal town of Severo-Kurilsk being inundated by the sea. Around six hours after the earthquake, the first tsunami waves reached Hawaii – with reports of waves up to 1.5 meters high. Waves arrived in California in the early morning, with Crescent City reportedly experiencing meter-high waves.

Millions across the Pacific region were ordered to evacuate when tsunami warnings and advisories were issued. But far-off locations like Hawaii and California saw only small waves of up to roughly 1.5 meters. Many of the warnings and advisories were later lifted or downgraded. Their issuance may have partly been due to caution, as tsunami waves can be unpredictable, and even small waves can be dangerous.

The tsunami was also small for a megathrust quake due to the earthquake's depth. The Kamchatka quake had a shallower hypocenter than the Tohoku and Indian Ocean quakes, but it was much weaker. Unlike what occurred during those other great temblors, fault motion during the Kamchatka quake does not seem to have reached all the way to the seafloor, Briggs says.

So, the quake was less effective at displacing water for a tsunami, and the resulting waves were less capable of devastating far-off regions.

Briggs said: "To push a big wave all the way across the Pacific, you really need a monster source, and this one is just knocking on the door of that."

Something similar occurred in 2010, when a magnitude 8.8 struck Chile and caused nearshore devastation while generating tsunami waves that were relatively weak at long distances.

The form of the coastline itself also matters. Narrow bays and steep shorelines can amplify tsunami waves, compressing them and making them more destructive.

So far, the tsunami reports roughly fit what's expected for this size and location of earthquake, Briggs said.

- There's a small chance of a bigger quake to follow

Smaller quakes have already occurred in the main quake's wake. As of 4 a.m. UTC, there have been at least 24 of these aftershocks with magnitudes above 5 (including a magnitude 6.9). And the USGS aftershock forecast shows that there's about a 60 percent chance that an aftershock of magnitude 7.0 or larger occurs in the next week.

There's also "a small chance that any earthquake can be followed by a larger one, and so that's why we always suggest that people stay on alert," Briggs said.

On July 20, his same region was struck by a magnitude 7.4 event, with this week's quake happening less than two weeks later. "That's an example, right there," he said.

Fortunately, the risk of a larger quake striking the region decreases with each passing day. According to the USGS – on average, there's only a 5 percent chance that a temblor will be followed by a larger one nearby in the next week.

Briggs said: "These don't happen super often. [But when they do happen] It is reminder of what subduction zones around the world are capable of."

An article by Staff titled "Some Facts About the Strongest Earthquakes Ever Recorded" was posted at apnews.com on July 30, 2025. Following are excerpts of the article.

The U.S. Geological Survey believes Wednesday's earthquake would potentially tie with the sixth largest earthquake recorded.

Here's a glance at some of the most powerful earthquakes recorded previously, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

1. Biobio, Chile – in 1960
 - 9.5 magnitude
 - 1,600 deaths – most of them caused by a large tsunami.
2. Alaska – in 1964
 - 9.2 magnitude – lasting for almost 5 minutes
 - 130 deaths
3. Sumatra, Indonesia – in 2004
 - 9.1 magnitude
 - 230,000 deaths – 167,000 deaths in Indonesia alone
4. Tohoku, Japan – in 2011
 - 9.1 magnitude
 - 18,000 deaths
5. Kamchatka, Russia – in 1952
 - 9.0 magnitude
 - no reported deaths
6. Biobio, Chile – in 2010
 - 8.8 magnitude
 - 500 deaths
7. Esmeraldas, Ecuador
 - 8.8 magnitude
 - 1,500 deaths

8. Alaska – 1950
 - 8.7 magnitude
 - minor damage
9. Tibet – in 1950
 - 8.6 magnitude
 - 780 deaths
10. Sumatra, Indonesia – in 2012
 - 8.6 magnitude
 - little damage, but it was the source of devastating 2004 tsunami

An article by Jeff Poor titled “[Senator Marsha] Blackburn Calls on Media to Return Pulitzer Prizes Awarded for Russia Collusion Hoax” was posted at breitbart.com on July 26, 2025. Following are excerpts of the article.

Friday [July 25] on FNC’s “Hannity,” Senator Marsha Blackburn (R-TN) took aim at the media for its involvement in the so-called Russia collusion hysteria.

The Tennessee Republican said the effort by Democrats and the media showed that they were “void of good ideas.”

Host Sean Hannity said: “All right. So, they outright lie for three long years, and then they just dismiss all of this. Oh, forget about the real intelligence. Forget about declassified information that you would think they want to see. Forget the fact that, with a high degree of confidence, you had top senior intelligence people saying this is wrong. What you’re doing, what we did was right. And oh, we don’t want to cover that after they lied for three years?”

Blackburn replied: “Well, and we should start by having them return all of their Pulitzers and their prizes and have them wear a sign that says gullible because you know that Brennan and Clapper and Comey were reeling them in like fish in a stocked pond. And they were probably laughing about how stupid they [the media] were that they printed everything they told them. And they never investigated anything. And now they are not going to cover it, Sean, because they know people have found them out. They know that they were not doing their job and the were expressing opinion.”

Isaiah 55:6-11—“Seek you the Lord while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the Lord, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. ‘For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,’ says the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word by that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”
